System Safety Noontime Seminars

It's the same in many professions, from using new air navigation equipment to assessing a new nuclear power plant design, from ensuring proper patient treatment to reporting on human factors and organizational management. As system safety professionals, we all can strengthen our knowledge if we learn from each other. Consider attending a System Safety noontime seminar outside your chosen discipline – you'll be surprised at the transferability of safety concepts between industries!

Noontime Seminar January 14 2010

Abstract

The fundamental goal of the investigative process in the correctional environment is to learn from the events that occur in our operations and focus the organizations energies on corrective measures so that the likelihood of similar incidents occurring again is diminished. A planned and detailed approach is essential to the success of any investigation.

Biography Drury Allen, Director General, Incident Investigation Branch, Correctional Services

Drury Allen is a criminologist with over 33 years with the Correctional Service. His career began with the Ottawa Parole Office, first as a Federal Parole Officer and later as Area Manager. Since then he has held a wide range of positions, including being a part time member of the National Parole Board, the first Executive Director of the Society of the Reform of the Criminal Law, a key project leader in a million dollar Lithuania-Canada Corrections project to develop a more modern and humane corrections system, and the first Canadian United Nations Advisor on Prisons in Afghanistan. Since 1994 he has been the Director General of the Incident Investigations Branch reporting directly to the Senior Deputy Commissioner of Correctional Services Canada.
